FDA Commissioner Jane Henney,

Given that we know the links between feeding rendered animal by-products to livestock and mad cow disease in Britain, it would seem wise to immediately stop that practice in the United States.

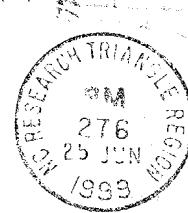

Please put an end to the practice of feeding animals and animal by-products to livestock. Several people have died from new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease. There is no reason to assume people in the U.S. are not or could not in the future be affected by dementia diseases which are caused by eating livestock which has been fed animal products from an infected animal.

Don't let the short-sighted economic concerns of the meat industry dictate your decision in this very important health issue.

Sincerely, C 320
